--O--

George Dorsey, the fledgling lawyer, is given the chance of his life when Mr. Cortley, owner of the automobile which had struck and presumably injured Mr. Ditson, asks George to settle with the latter for $25,000 instead of $50,000. Just when the case seems hopeless, however, Mazie rushes into the breach as usual. Suspecting that Ditson is a professional "accident hound", Mazie insinuates herself into his house, where, by means of her extraordinary agility in the "Charleston", she inspires Ditson to cast aside his crutches and dance agiloly. This is the cue for Tripp and Fall, the versatile detectives, to take an incriminating photo. But in spite of the fact that the simple detectives got a picture of nothing more incriminating than a table and chair, Mazie, by means of a thrilling race in numerous vehicles is able to get to her employer's office in time to bluff Ditson and cause him to drop his claim. Once again George has been saved by his scintillant stenographor.
